"Norco gains its name from its location North Corona or North Corona Land Company as it was termed by the city's founder, Rex B. Clark. In the early years, the city was known by a variety of names including: Citrus Belt and Orchard Heights. Norco was incorporated in 1964 and has always been known as an animal-oriented community with over 95 miles of horse trails and 400 acres of horseback riding parkland."

Picture of Walter Knott and Family in front of their "second" berry stand and nursery around 1930, at the corner of Hamner Ave. and Third Street in Norco (where the "Norco Western Town Plaza" is now located). The Knott family grew berries not far away from the stand. The Knott's "second" berry stand in Norco never "took off" like the original Knott's Berry Farm in Buena Park.

HISTORY OF NORCO, CALIFORNIA “Norco, the Vale of Dreams Come True”

That's what greeted readers of the Los Angeles Times on April 26, 1923. Norco was developer Rex Clark's vision of a utopian settlement of independent farmers reaping the rewards of their hard work on small farms and ranches. Clark saw Norco as a refuge for city dwellers—no boss, no commute, no postage stamp-sized apartment—just fresh air and the satisfaction of making your own way in the world. However, Norco did not start with Rex Clark. At the turn of the twentieth century, the area that would become Norco consisted of the open range of Rancho La Sierra (Sepulveda). Unlike other rancho properties in Southern California, this one remained undivided well past the boom years of the late nineteenth century. Its owner, the Stearns Rancho Company, held onto the land in hopes of selling it whole to a potential developer. The Los Angeles Times, commenting on its long delayed sale, observed, “...as the years passed...La Sierra entered on a sleep longer than that of Rip Van Winkle”
